LET'S CONNECT Facebook // Pinterest // Instagram // Shop Dawn is an artist, illustrator, designer, senior brand ambassador for Tombow and creative blogger Dawn Nicole Designs®. She is the wife of the Air Force and a mom of three who has made licensed artworks and handmade inscriptions for such companies and brands as The Hobby Lobby, TJ Maxx, Krispy Kreme Doughnuts, and silhouette Design Store. Usually it can be found with an apple pencil in one hand, coffee in the other and a German (or two) underfoot. Hey, friends! I've taught some local hand inscriptions lately, and as I've been putting together some resources for students, I've decided to create a nice, new set of brush writing practice sheets. These sheets are designed specifically to help you master the lower register of the alphabet brush. I checked them out last night with a large group of women (plus Little Crafter) at the local library and they were a hit. Each letter has three examples for you to look at, then some light colored examples follow with a pen, so you can feel how the upstrokes and downstrokes of this letter work. Then, there is about one and a half lined space for you to practice on your own. As always, I believe that practice makes progress, so the more you write a letter, the better you get at it! So fill those lines... There are two simple ways to use these practice pages to write brushes. 1. Download them to your computer and then print and use with brush handles. Tombow Fudenosuke is ideal for use on these pages because the tip size is perfect for examples. If you like it, however, you can also fill the string with a double pen brush to give you a practice with two different types and sizes of handles. 2. Download them on iPad Pro and open them in the Procreate app. If you're lucky enough to have an iPad Pro and want to make your labels digital, just open every page in Procreate, and then use Apple Pencil to follow the examples and write your own. The best part about this is that you can always erase and reuse practice sheets as many times as you like! The specific brush I use is called Light Calligraphy and is available on Creative Market. As you get increasingly comfortable with writing, feel free to use extra lines to practice decorations too. There is no wrong way to use these sheets! The key is just to choose what works best for you and get started. Here's where to grab them: Download the Lowercase Letter Tods Alphabet Practice Sheets Just click on the link above and you'll see all six sheets. Each one has 4-5 letters on it, so you need to download all six for the full alphabet. Hope they will help you in your journey of writing! Want more? Click here to grab practice sheets that will take you through the alphabet one letter at a time. I also have a companion set of free practice pages for the top register of the alphabet brush too, so you can move on to the following. Be sure to check out my step-by-step guide to the basic method of writing brushes, and don't forget, you can also order my 208 pages of interactive work book, Hand Letters for Relaxation! Happy inscriptions, friends! Hey Planning Mashers! Looking for a way to improve your writing? You're in the right place, here are tons of FREE print sheets to you learn this skill. This post may contain affiliate links. They won't have any extra costs for you, but I get a small loan. Please see my disclosure for more details. Thanks for supporting Masha Plans! Writing is one of the skills you may want to master for your Bullet Journal pages. I'm always thrilled with the beautiful calligraphy people use to decorate their pages in a magazine. I've been really working on my writing lately, and if you're a beginner be sure to check out my Beginner's Guide to Brush Letters. What I quickly realized was that the secret to the best writing was of course practice, so I did my research and found tons of free resources and print sheets to improve this skill. Before we dive in though, here are some tips and materials to make sure you're ready to come up with your caption. Starting with lettering the basics of the inscription are pretty simple - downstroke thick, upstroke thin. Just so, you can create a brush of calligraphy. It's certainly a little tricky when you start, but as you practice you'll see things get easier. A few basic tips for brushing the inscription are: Hold the pen at a 45 degree angle. It will make sure that you can get thick and thin strokes without damaging the brush. Lift the handle up after each impact. The letter doesn't write, so it's perfectly normal to lift a brush to help you create more promising letters. Hold on. There is no rush, take no time when you email and make sure you put thoughts on your emails. Where to learn Letter Well, of course, I advise you to start with my Brush Letter Guide for Beginners, but here are a few more resources that you might consider.
